I have not forgotten the scenes of 1841; they are about to be re-enacted. When I presented my views in the address referred to, I had hoped there would be no farther occasion, for the present at least, that I should have more to say. But four of my colleagues - to wit, Mr. Pendleton, Mr. Preston, Mr. Fulton, and Mr. Flournoy - have published a pamphlet, intended as an answer to mine, which, in regard to some of its facts and deductions, I purpose briefly, and very briefly, to notice. There is an ill-concealed vein, or attempt at irony, lurking through the piece, which I shall pass without observation, only-for the reason that I feel that I am as far above its reach, as the attempt itself is unworthy of consideration. I seek no controversy with these gentlemen, or any others; I have indulged in no acrimonious remarks in reference to any individual; I have sought to disparage no one; I made no personal allusion to any one of the four except to Mr. Preston, and then in terms of respect and kindness; nor would they, if strength of argument had availed them, have been disposed to use so impotent an instrument against me, even under cover and disguise. Argument failing, a feeble effort at disparagement is adopted. Be it so. Let their tastes be gratified. I have a higher object...
